The gospel reading tells us that Jesus had compassion on his people “because they were like sheep without a shepherd.” The Hebrew word for ‘shepherd’ also means ‘to rule’. Thus, it was not uncommon to compare the terms ‘shepherd’ and ‘ruler’ since both were expected to feed those entrusted to their care, providing for all their needs.

Jeremiah’s prophesy, written towards the end of the rule of king Zedekiah, just before the Babylonian captivity in 587 B.C., reflects over the reins of Judah’s shepherds (kings) who have misgoverned their flocks (people). Together with the foretelling of doom, the passage ends with a promise of the Messiah “who will reign as true king and be wise.” While Jeremiah was thinking of a historical restoration of the Monarchy with a Davidic king after the Exile, the Christian community understands the passage as a fulfillment of Jesus Christ, the Good Shepherd.

In Psalm 23, we see three ‘functions’ of the Shepherd: first, God is portrayed as shepherd leading the flock to green pastures and restful waters; next, God is protector who dispels fear; third, God is host who feeds at a banquet. These three functions are interpreted in the light of Jesus who leads (his followers), protects (the poor and needy) and feeds (the hungry with bread, as well as in the Eucharist).

The second reading highlights the core of Paul’s letter to the Ephesians: “You who have been apart from us have been brought very close.” The original reference is to the reconciliation of both, Jews and Gentiles, through Christ’s death. The reading also speaks of the ‘New Man’ created, who have been apart from God, now become a part of God through communion with Jesus.

Every shepherd – pastors, religious, church leaders, and parents too – are called to become a part of Jesus by resting with Him and reflecting on Him. Jesus’ apostles were so deeply to eat.” Thus, involved in ministry that “they had no time even like a shepherd leading his flock to restful waters, Jesus leads them to a lonely place – for rest, reflection and re-creation. He desires that they replenish their resources to bear more fruit. This a part of discipleship.
